

Letter 417
The Opening Door
2015-11-20

Dear Dan,

About two weeks ago I saw a sign that made me wonder. Please permit me to explain.

In the hospital facility that I work at, there are a proliferation of automatic electrically opened doors. This is especially true in the area where I clean at (G6a). So I am used to having doors open, seemingly of their own accord, and then seeing someone come walking through into the space I am cleaning.

But on this one occasion I was pushing my Brute 44 trash barrel through a hallway toward the door of a room I wanted to go into. Just before I got to the push button switch on the wall that would activate the door opener, the door swung open. I expected someone from inside the room to come through, since there are control switches on both sides of the door.

I kept advancing toward the opening door, and I slowed down so as not to hit the person who I thought would be coming out. But as I started to go through the door, I saw no one there. I thought maybe someone had pushed the switch, but then changed their mind or something, but there wasn't enough time for a person to do that and exit the room through another door without me noticing.

Then I thought maybe the door malfunctioned, and coincidentally opened right when I needed it. But something else happened, or more accurately DIDN'T happen, that made me wonder. This was the distinct absence of mechanical noise that indicates the door is being operated.

Then, after the door closed, I was standing a few feet away from it getting ready to empty the garbage can that was to the right of the door, and the door opened again. And, just like before, I could see no one, of the human persuasion at least, come through the door, nor had anyone pushed the switch in passing in the hallway just outside. I knew I hadn't accidentally pushed the switch on the wall next to me. And it was also eerily devoid of mechanical noise the same as before.

So, I began my usual inquiry of my spirit people co-workers, and all that I got was a statement from angel Gabriel that went something like:

"IF I ADMITTED TO OPENING THE DOOR,
THEN IT WOULDN'T BE A MYSTERY".

So Dan, we have yet another mystery that is like the Paper Towel roll I wrote about in Letter 316 Volume 5-15.

Blessings...
